

The Myth That Viruses Cause Disease...

Is the Body a Battlefield or a Garden?

A talk on Bio Terrain Medicine by Daniel Thompson Mills

Rather than the body being constantly under attack and defending itself from pathogenic microbes, our body is a garden. Health is maintained and restored by nourishing the terrain of the body, like a gardener tends his soil.

In this presentation with slides, Daniel will explain that

- pathogenic viruses don't exist;
- bacteria, fungi And even parasites are the body's internal helpers;
- There are four causes of illness;
- What we call illness is actually the bodies healing response, given one or more of the above causes;
- The categories we call disease don't exist; along with lots of other things.

Daniel has been very interested in how the human body works and in natural healing since the 1990s. He spent 18 years living in a low impact, permaculture community in a woodland, and has facilitated people's connection to nature for many years.

Daniel has a law degree and has been a campaigner and an activist since the 1980s. He spent several years with the McLibel campaign, supporting two people being sued for libel by McDonald's and campaigning on health, environmental, social justice and animal issues.

Last but not least, he's an anarchist in the true sense of the word, an independent researcher and self-published author.
